This week's testimonial is from one of our parents.

Sometimes knowing that your child belongs somewhere gives you an immediate sense of peace. That is how I felt when we walked in through the doors of Heol Goffa.

At our initial look around the school, our son screamed for the entire time we were with the head teacher and she didn't flinch or bat an eye lid. I knew then that he would be welcomed, I knew he would be safe and I knew he would be cared for.

The school has a warmth, a positive energy, like an electric force field that surrounding it. It is a beacon of familial care within a school setting.

My son just loves the bus. It's important to him, that bit of time where he is independent of me. He's growing up so fast and this tiny bit of time- where he is on his own, but with others is just one way in which transport to and from school lifts and broadens his experience of the world.

I've bumped into my sons class in Asda, a sprawling mass of orange energy with my son a part of it. Inclusion, community and being is a way of life.
